B.A. ENGLISH

OVERVIEW

The English program prepares students to enter many diverse professional fields. English majors develop solid writing skills, communication, and research skills that can be applied to graduate studies, teaching, or a career in public or private sectors. Our program teaches students how to think critically and creatively from a variety of perspectives. The kinds of critical thinking strategies our faculty teach to students serve to cultivate the "human" in the "humanities" through the development of soft skills such as: ethical and personal responsibility, collaboration, and interpersonal communication.

As an English major, you can expect to develop as a writer and critical empathetic thinker. You will learn how to analyze language and literature and to discuss how these ways of seeing shape our cultures and identities. Equipped with these skills, our graduates develop into lifelong learners that possess the ability to problem solve, synthesize information, and engage in complex conversations. These skills are valuable to employers in an increasingly diverse workforce including the sectors of pre-law and legal work, secondary and higher education, marketing and public relations, and copyediting and publishing, among others.
